

STEPS USED FOR SPELLCORRECTOR, AUTOCOMPLETE AND SNIPPET:

To implement spellCorrector I used peter norvig's spellCorrector. Norvig's spell checker creates a serialized dictionary based on the data input given to it "big.txt". In order to create the data set for "latimes" site, big.txt was generated using the html files provided for latimes. Big.txt will now have all the words corresponding to the content of html files given in latimes. A java maven project was created which imported Apache Tika library and uses HTML Parser for parsing content through the html files provided. The client code is ir_hw5_1_latest.php accepts the query requests. Norvig's spellcorrector file "SpellCorrector.php" was included in the client php file which uses the big.txt that has been created. Big.txt generated using the java code was copied in the same root folder as the client php file and SpellCorrector.php, so that SpellCorrector could directly read it from same path. If a query or a term is wrongly typed, SpellCorrector will take the wrong word as input and suggest the correct word based on the serialized dictionary it created using the data available for latimes. The correct word is shown as the result with link which redirects to the top 10 Lucene results when query for correct word is made.

Autocomplete feature has been implemented using the solr setup we had done for assignment 4. For this I had modified the solrconfig.xml file. Solr.SuggestComponent was added in the solr.SearchHandler. With this new config of solr, if a query is fired with "/suggest", the new requestHandler which uses the suggestComponent is called. In order to make the query with suggest function, I added the new solr url(the localhost solr url for solr search engine) which would be called with the query term "q" and "suggest". The new url would make a request to solr for the query term using the suggest handler and return the json output. The url that fires the request has parameters for solr to return the response as json. The top five results returned by solr.SuggestComponent is displayed in the drop down of the query text box. When user selects one of the terms from the suggested list and hits submit, the top ten results for that term is returned based on the algorithm (Lucene / pagerank) selected.

If there is a spelling error in the query, autocomplete list should suggest the correct spell for the query.

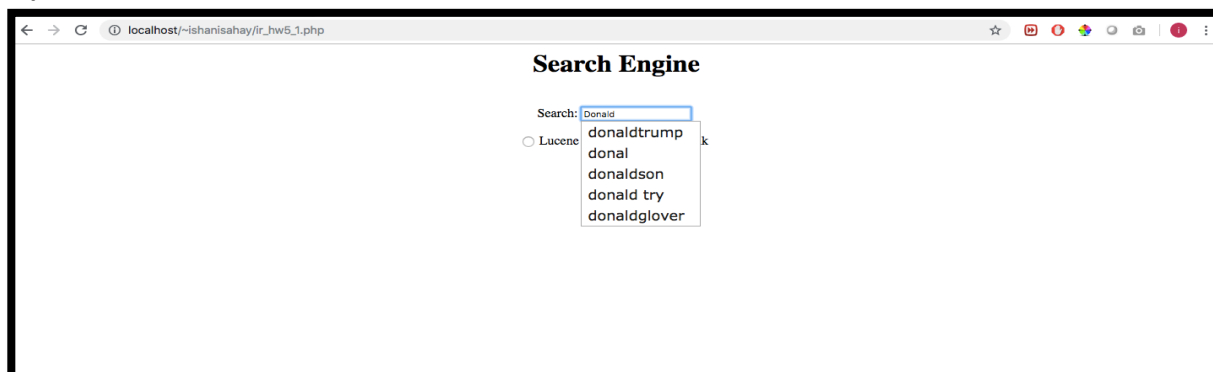

Snippet is shown for the top ten results for the query term. For each result the contents of the page/url is retrieved using the file_get_contents() function. Special characters are removed from the content returned. A string corresponding to all the query terms is created. Using a regex match function, this string containing all the query terms is matched with each sentence of the file content. Since snippets are 156 characters in length and ellipses, the sentence match with 160 character count was generated as the snippet for the query term. In snippet, the words corresponding to the query terms have been highlighted. If for a specific file there is no snippet that matches the query terms, we display "N/A".

Config Note: As mentioned in the notes, the requestHandler of select in solrconfig.xml has been modified to add "<str name='q.op'>AND</str>" so that the search results contain all the query terms.

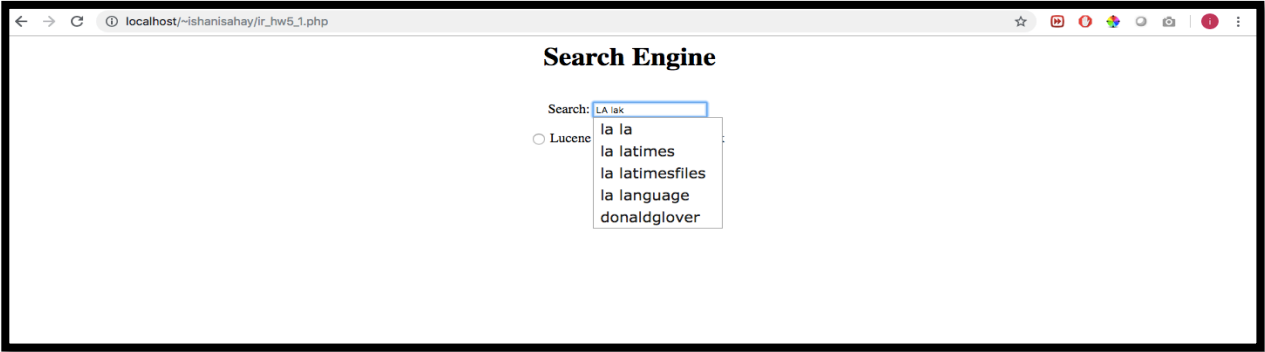

As done in assignment4, the display results show Id, Title, outgoing url, description and snippet corresponding to each result.
